You can use Photoshop Elements to edit existing images or create new images from scratch. In this post, you will learn about designing a Photoshop Elements template. What is a Photoshop Elements template? A Photoshop Elements template or Photoshop template is a document with different layers, which you can use as a starting point when designing new images. A template is the best way to create original graphics (images, emojis, memes) for your website or blog, because the graphics will be ready-made. They can be easily customized and shared with your friends. A Photoshop template can be used to create graphics in 4 ways create original graphics from scratch use stock images copy and paste images from websites download and edit images from images.google.com Now that we have a better understanding of what a Photoshop Elements template is, let’s dive right in! How to create a Photoshop Elements template Using Photoshop Elements for Graphic Design is a fun and easy way to design high-quality graphics. If you are new to designing, you can start with a template. They take less time to design than creating original graphics. Before you start designing, you need to download the Photoshop Elements template of your choice. The majority of the time, these templates are free. But you can get high-quality premium templates for a fee. Choose a theme, add or remove elements, adjust the layout and save. 1. Choose a Template: Design a Photoshop Elements Template Launch Photoshop Elements and launch the icon in the left hand pane. The Template panel displays a list of templates, sorted by language. Click the Template of your choice to load it in the workspace. Free (Oasis) editable templates A large number of templates are available free in the Adobe website: Discover (Paid) editable templates A small number of Photoshop templates are available for a fee as of this writing: An example template With a template, we can create an image from scratch. Or, if you don't have an image you'd like to use, you can download and use an image from Google or the internet. With stock images, you can choose from a large collection of high quality images. If you're going to use an image, it's important to save it in the right format so that it can be easily imported into Photoshop Elements 388ed7b0c7

Activate it by clicking on one of the brush tools. The pencil icon (below right) shows how you activate the Clone Stamp. Click on the Clone Stamp icon again to choose a color for the source region of pixels. After choosing a source, click on the target area to copy pixels from the source to the target. You can also specify the settings for the brush in the Brush Preview window that opens. Brushes are usually combined with one another in a mask. A mask allows you to isolate a part of an image and create effects on that area. You can combine multiple Photoshop brushes into a multipart mask to create complex effects. Here is an example of a watercolor brush and a paintbrush masks that can be used together to create a composite effect. Create a brush mask To create a brush mask, follow these steps. Click on the Photoshop brush icon (at left), then click on Create Brush Mask (below left). When the brush mask is active, click on either of the brushes or the target area. A brush mask can have multiple brushes combined within one mask. When you click on the brush, you will see an option for More Settings for that brush in the Brush Settings dialog box. Click on the arrow icon (right side) to see all of the brushes that can be used for this brush mask. You can click on the preview button (below the brush box) to preview the mask. Work with text Most people use Photoshop to work with text. The common effects that can be used are: Lettering, Typography, Design, and Photo Manipulation. The Type tool can be activated by clicking on the little letter T icon (below left). Click on the Type tool again to create a new font. Select the Type tool again to choose a font from the Type menu. Type text and click elsewhere on the page to make the text appear on the screen. Type text and click anywhere else on the screen to remove the text. You can also choose the size of a font in the Size menu. Click on the tiny icon (left side) to open the Type menu. Pick a font size from the Type menu. You can use the free Transform tools to resize and move text. Click on the Transform tools icon (below left) and drag the corners of the text box to resize it. You can place text using the Insert key and move it around by clicking on the text box and dragging it. To

UK scientists say court ruling to cancel nuke plans damaging By our reporters 8 December 2018 Scientists around the world are expressing consternation over a legal ruling by the House of Lords in London that obliges the government to abandon plans to build six new nuclear reactors in England, claiming the ruling is “dangerous, unnecessary, and ultimately likely to cause an unnecessary increase in public risk.” At the heart of the ruling is the attempt of an anti-nuclear movement to delay construction of the new facilities, ostensibly to allow the government time to negotiate an agreement with France to supply nuclear energy. Against this background, the court stated the government’s decision to proceed with the construction of the new reactors, without a full impact assessment, was not in accordance with the Environmental Protection Act. The court went on to conclude that the government had disregarded the findings of the committee charged with making the assessment. Lord Hogg, who sat in the Upper House of the House of Lords, was unequivocal in his criticism of the court’s action: “It is apparent that the government has not set out its case in accordance with the requirements of law and that there is a material risk of serious public harm arising from the consequences of its plan for nuclear power production.” Lord Wilson, the barrister acting for Greenpeace UK, also spoke of the “unnecessary risk” of the ruling. It is now up to the government to decide whether it will challenge the ruling in the UK Supreme Court. The UK has two existing nuclear reactors at the Hinkley Point site in Somerset. There has been heavy criticism of the way in which the government has made this decision, with the National Audit Office releasing a report in May concluding that the public could see costs rise as much as £16 billion without any benefit of carbon emission reductions. This would also involve an average deficit of £400 million per year over 20 years. More than 100 eminent scientists, including dozens of Nobel laureates, have signed a statement expressing “deep concern” at the decision to scrap the reactors. In an open letter, they write, “The consequences of the government’s decision to abandon the new nuclear build, which it described as a ‘terrible mistake,’ could be disastrous for the UK, tarnishing the UK’s world leading reputation and damaging the economy for years to come.💎
